

Opinion | Betsey Stevenson, Columnist

2024's Economy Will Be Just as Unpredictable as 2023's

Regardless of whether the US has a recession this year, the current state of the economy is reason to celebrate.

January 3, 2024 at 6:30 AM EST

By Betsey Stevenson

Betsey Stevenson is a professor of public policy and economics at the University of Michigan. She was on the president's Council of Economic Advisers and was chief economist at the US Department of Labor.

We've updated our terms

By accepting, you agree to our updated Terms of Service, including the arbitration provision and class action waiver. You understand that we process your information as described in the Privacy Policy, which may include sharing information about your use of Bloomberg.com with third parties. Accepting does not affect your right to opt-out at any time via the Do Not Sell or Share My Personal Information link in the website footer.

Accept

Get unlimited access for just
$1.99 your first month

Claim This Offer

We've updated our terms

By accepting, you agree to our updated Terms of Service, including the arbitration provision and class action waiver. You understand that we process your information as described in the Privacy Policy, which may include sharing information about your use of Bloomberg.com with third parties. Accepting does not affect your right to opt-out at any time via the Do Not Sell or Share My Personal Information link in the website footer.

Get unlimited access for just
$1.99 your first month